I hadn't realised quite how much cowslip seed must have been in the mix that I sowed in this part of the field; this must now be about its fourth season. The butterflies don't seem to visit it but my moth counts are up and the bumble bee varieties and numbers seem greater than in previous years.

A naturally occurring clump of cowslips in the same field (probably self sown about eight years ago) is still a better sight.

I'd love a field!

What happened to the Kestrel, John?

Best wishes,

Lee
